Introduction

This guide has been designed to assist Alaskans in identifying state and community resources available to better understand and treat behavioral health problems. For this document, behavioral health is defined as a person's response to difficulties that result in that person experiencing a mental illness or substance use disorder. Because there is no barrier to age, race, economic level, religion, or family background as to who may experience a mental illness and/or a substance use disorder, the services described are targeted to individual needs.

While we have included the majority of services, there are sure to be other resources not listed in these pages. For that reason, the developers of this guide encourage individuals to look beyond these pages to faith-based programs, private agencies or therapists in communities, internet education, on-line support groups, 12-step groups, and trusted family or friends.

Research shows that all of us need support and connection with others and each of us needs to have many sources of support. Please, don't be afraid to continue to seek assistance and support that best fits the needs you or a loved one are experiencing. None of us are less than any other, and all of us are entitled to not only ask for help, but to keep asking for that help. There is no wrong question.

If you see any errors or omissions, please inform us through our websites where there is also an electronic version.

Section 1. Some First Steps

Because you have opened this resource guide, it is likely that you or someone you know is struggling with a mental health and/or a substance use issue. You are looking for help and are wondering where to start.

See Your Doctor or Clinic

When you are physically sick and not getting better, you turn to your doctor or health clinic. The same approach works when your mental health and/or substance use are causing you to question what you are experiencing. Start with your personal doctor or the health care professional who takes care of you most frequently. They can assist with a plan of action and refer you to addiction and mental health professionals if necessary.

Addiction and Mental Health Care Professionals

You may choose to go directly to an addiction or mental health service in your community. Many smaller Alaskan communities have a Rural Human Services worker (also known as a village-based counselor, family service worker, or behavioral health aide) who provides substance abuse and mental health services. They can be found in Section 2 for each community.

Psychiatrists, Psychologists, Social Workers, Nurses, Therapists, Behavioral Health Aides, and Counselors—Who Does What?

Just as a heart patient may need the services of a cardiologist, nurse, physical therapist, dietitian and other medical services, a person with an addiction or mental illness may benefit from the services of several types of substance abuse and/or mental health professionals. Extensive research shows that our mental health difficulties and substance abuse problems are very closely related. For this reason, more professionals are able, or learning, to give assistance in both areas.

A psychiatrist is a medical doctor specializing in psychiatry, the branch of medicine that deals with mental and emotional disorders. Since psychiatrists are physicians, they can prescribe medications. They treat substance use and mental health disorders.

Psychologists are PhD-credentialed scientists who study human behavior, both normal and abnormal. They focus on the environmental and learning-based causes of mental health and substance abuse problems.

Psychiatrists, psychologists and other behavioral health professionals such as social workers, counselors, and clinicians can help the recovery process as they help identify the external factors that may be impacting a person's behavioral health. This is the same as the heart patient who takes medication but also needs to learn new eating habits and develop coping skills for external factors such as stress.

Recovery refers to the ways in which people with a mental illness and /or addiction experience and manage their disorders in the process of reclaiming their life in their community. Recovery-oriented care is what mental health and addiction treatment and rehabilitation service workers offer in support of a person's recovery.

Recovery is a different process for every person. Like any kind of illness or disorder, it takes time to determine the extent of the problem, the possible treatment, medication, and lifestyle changes needed. Remember: treatment works and recovery does happen!

Emergency Care

If you are having a behavioral health crisis such as thoughts of suicide, immediately go to your closest hospital emergency room or call the statewide hotline 1-877-266-4357. All Alaska hospital emergency departments are prepared to assist and connect you with behavioral health services that would be most beneficial for you. If you are in a location where access to hospitals/ phones is not available, please reach out to your local clinic, a friend, or family member to get connected to emergency care.

Hospitals & Residential Treatment Services

For the most serious cases, a stay at a residential facility or a hospital with a specialized unit for behavioral health treatment may be called for. Alaska Psychiatric Institute (API), in Anchorage, is Alaska's only state run psychiatric hospital. Other hospitals in Anchorage, Juneau and Fairbanks also have psychiatric units.

Education and Information

This guide provides you with a list of resources that offer additional support and information about behavioral health. Included in the back is a glossary of basic terms and a definition of behavioral health.

Section 2. Finding Resources in Your Community

This section helps you find the behavioral health services available in your area of Alaska. Communities are listed alphabetically.

With the exceptions of the toll-free 800 numbers, all area codes for phone numbers listed here are 907 (Alaska's area code).

In larger communities there are many private behavioral health providers. We are not able to list all medical or other professional groups individually. You can find them in the Yellow Page listings in your phone book under these categories:

Opioid Treatment Programs

Opioid treatment programs (OTP) provide conjoint comprehensive substance abuse counseling and medication assisted treatment (MAT). Methadone is utilized to prevent the onset of withdrawal symptoms, reduce or eliminate drug craving and block the euphoric effects of any illicitly self-administered narcotics while the patient is undergoing rehabilitation.

For further information on programs in Alaska contact the state methadone authority designee:

Prevention & Early Intervention

Prevention and early intervention programs are developed to recognize problem behaviors earlier and can increase an individual's resiliency while decreasing the risk of problem behaviors. Research shows the effectiveness of early identification allows providers to better understand individual needs that lower risk and increase protective factors. Individuals become healthier and more productive members of our communities. The cost savings can be dramatic and can lessen need for expensive crisis treatment.

Listed below are some programs that offer community-based services in Alaska. The list includes early intervention programs such as Alcohol and Drug Information Schools and Alcohol Safety Action Programs. Communities offer prevention services for families, schools, faith-based organizations and through the media.

To learn more about prevention, visit the website listed below. To find the organizations easily, go to the Division of Behavioral Health website; click on the Prevention & Early Intervention Program link, then on Web Links.

Alcohol Safety & Action Programs (ASAP)

www.hss.state.ak.us/dbh/prevention/programs/asap/

The Alcohol Safety & Action Program (ASAP) provides substance abuse screening and case management services while ensuring accountability from individuals with DWI and other alcohol/drug related misdemeanor offenses. This involves screening cases referred from the district court into drinker classification categories, as well as thoroughly monitoring cases throughout education and /or treatment requirements.

ASAP operates as a neutral link between justice and health care delivery systems. This requires a close working relationship among all involved agencies: enforcement, prosecution, judicial, probation, corrections, rehabilitation, licensing, traffic records, and public information/education.

The benefits of ASAP monitoring are:

Increased accountability of offenders;

Reduced recidivism resulting from successful completion of required education or treatment;

Significant reductions in the amount of resources spent by prosecutors, law enforcement officers, judges, attorneys, and corrections officers enforcing court-ordered conditions; and increased safety for victims and the larger community because offenders are more likely to be receiving treatment, making court appearances, and complying with other probation conditions.

Alcohol/Drug Information Programs (ADIS)

www.hss.state.ak.us/dbh/prevention/programs/adis/

The State of Alaska, Department of Health & Social Services Division of Behavioral Health approves the following Adult (over 18 years of age) and Youth (under 21 years of age) Alcohol/Drug Information School Programs. Programs listed for YOUTH are currently approved only for any person under 21 years of age at the time of program completion. ADULT programs are only for those who are at least 18 years of age at the time they begin the program.

The ADIS program does not in any way constitute a treatment program, nor does it fulfill any treatment requirements. These programs are designed to be an educational intervention and are best suited for those who may meet Level .05 of ASAM-American Society of Addiction Medicine's Patient Placement Criteria or those in need of prevention education.

If you have any questions regarding this directory or any ADIS program, please contact the Division of Behavioral Health, ADIS Coordinator at 1-800-478-7677 or in writing at:

Therapeutic Courts

www.state.ak.us/courts/trialcts.htm#therapeutic

The therapeutic court model is not an “easy way out” of a felony or misdemeanor, but an alternative justice model in which a collaborative court team made up of a supervising judge, district attorney, defense counsel adult or juvenile probation officer and/or substance abuse or mental health treatment provider, oversees and closely monitors participants who chose the treatment program in lieu of incarceration.

Participants are accepted into a therapeutic court if they meet the eligibility standards of each court and the substance abuse or mental health treatment criteria of the provider. This is a voluntary commitment made by an individual along with a plea of “no contest” or “guilty”. In the case of the family care court, the parent agrees to the allegations of abuse and/or neglect in order to “opt in”.

Participants must be willing to commit to a structured program and plan for the duration of their involvement in the program and have their sentencing deferred. Although the details vary within each of the types of therapeutic courts, the basic structure is the same. Upon successful completion of the program, participants’ sentences are imposed according to the initially negotiated agreements. Participants who are unable or unwilling to complete the program are dismissed and their sentence is immediately imposed.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Diagnostic Teams

www.hss.state.ak.us/fas/

FAS is a medical diagnosis made by a physician specifically trained in the assessment of birth defects. Alaskans are fortunate to have the option of being able to access a specialized, multi-disciplinary diagnostic team in most regions. The individual is assessed and receives a summary of what areas of strengths and needs are found. A plan of care is then developed so that an individual, family, or caregiver can assist in the individual becoming better able to live as independent as possible for the duration of their life.

Section 3. What is Behavioral Health?

“Behavioral health is a state of emotional and psychological well-being in which an individual is able to use his or her cognitive and emotional capabilities, function in society, and meet the ordinary demands of everyday life.”

www.thefreedictionary.com/mental+health

Some of the terms that are used in the behavioral health field are defined below:

Abuse

This is a condition in which individuals consciously and voluntarily overuse drugs, causing danger to themselves or others. (compare with dependence)

Addiction

The general term for a condition of drug use or habitual activity that is beyond voluntary control.

Alcoholic

A person who is alcohol-dependent (scientific definition) or who attends Alcoholics Anonymous (broader definition).

Alcoholism

The general term for a condition of alcohol overuse that is beyond voluntary control. Alcohol dependence is the more accurate diagnostic term for clinical and research purposes.

Anxiety Disorders

Anxiety disorders can include everything from panic attacks to post traumatic stress disorder and obsessive compulsive disorder. Some symptoms or signs include: feelings of fear or dread, restlessness and muscle tension, rapid heart rate, dizziness, perspiration, cold hands/feet, and shortness of breath.

Co-occurring Disorders

Can encompass a wide range such as a person with developmental disabilities who also has emotional problems or an alcoholic who experiences depression.

Drug

Any chemical other than food or water that produces a therapeutic or nontherapeutic pharmacological action (effect) in the body. Alcohol is a drug.

Drug Dependence (includes alcohol)

The process of adaptation to a drug or chemical, generally when taken over a long period of time, resulting in withdrawal upon cessation of the drug's use. Some symptoms might include: needing increased amounts of the drug/alcohol, withdrawal syndrome if the drug is discontinued, a great deal of time spent thinking about how to get the drug/alcohol, decrease of other activities, continuing use of the drug despite the negative impact it has on physical or psychological health.

Drug Abuse (includes alcohol)

This is defined as a maladaptive pattern of drug use leading to clinically significant impairment or distress and at least one other symptom such as: failure to fulfill major role obligations because of drug use, recurrent use in situations in which it is physically hazardous, recurrent drug related legal problems, or continued use despite having persistent social or interpersonal problems caused or exacerbated by the use.

Hallucination

A perception of something (such as a visual image or a sensation of sound) with no external cause, usually arising as a disorder of the nervous system (as in psychosis) or in response to a drug (for example, LSD).

Hangover

A period of discomfort occurring several hours after the overuse of a drug, often related to overdrinking by alcohol abusers or dependent individuals, but also occurring with any drug that causes a “morning-after” array of uncomfortable symptoms.

Impulse Control Disorder

This is a fairly new area and can include attention deficit disorder, intermittent explosive disorder, and other disorder that have an acting-out component.

Mental Health

As used in this guide, this term refers to services for an individual to decrease symptoms of a mental illness.

Mental Illness

A person can be said to experience a mental illness if it:

1.) impairs her/his functioning; 2.) causes the person distress; and 3.) is not culturally expected behaviors, thoughts, or feelings. The first part, “functioning”, means that individuals are limited in achieving or maintaining developmentally appropriate social, behavioral, cognitive, communicative, or adaptive life skills.

A temporary and expected response to stressful events is not called “mental illness.”

Mood Disorders

The best known of these disorders are major depression and bipolar disorder. Some symptoms of depression include: continual sadness, insomnia, decreased appetite, irritability, hopelessness, poor self-esteem, and suicidal thoughts.

Psychosis

This includes schizophrenia and also the more extreme expressions of mood disorders and other conditions where the person experiences disturbances of perception and thought. Symptoms can include hallucinations, flat affect, disorganized thoughts, delusions, and agitation.

Withdrawal

The signs and symptoms that arise when the use of a drug is abruptly stopped. There is a continuum of symptoms that may happen when a person stops using a drug that they have been using a long time, from a hangover, to serious seizures that can be fatal if not closely monitored.

Section 4. How to Pay for Behavioral Health Services

What is private insurance?

About sixty (60) percent of Alaska's adult population has health insurance through their employers. This number does not include those adults who are children or older Alaskans. While private health insurance may offer some coverage for behavioral health treatment, this treatment often is not paid for at the same rate as other health care services. To have the best insurance coverage for behavioral health services, you may need to first ask for authorization for behavioral health services from your insurer or receive a referral from your medical care provider. If you have health insurance, it is useful to call your insurer and find out how to get the best coverage possible for the behavioral health services you seek.

Resources for the uninsured: If you don't have private insurance, there are a number of resources to help you look for assistance.

1. Community-based resources: many communities have behavioral health centers. These centers offer a range of substance use disorder and mental health treatment and counseling services, usually at a reduced rate for individuals and families with a lower income. Many of these programs are listed in this resource guide and can help you identify other resources as well.
2. Pastoral counseling: your church or faith-based organization may be able to put you in touch with a counseling program or provide some support for dealing with your behavioral health questions.
3. Self-help groups: another option is to join a self-help or support group. Such groups give people a chance to learn about, talk about, and work on common problems. A group may already be in existence, for instance an Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) meeting group can be found throughout Alaska, or can be formed when enough individuals with a similar problem such as depression, family issues, relationships, substance abuse, or eating disorders. Self-help groups are generally free and can be found in virtually every community in America.
4. Denali KidCare: provides excellent health insurance coverage for children and teens through age 18, and for pregnant women who meet income guidelines. Further information is available at <http://hss.state.ak.us/dhcs/DenaliKidCare/>
5. Public assistance: People experiencing mental illness, substance-use disorder, or other disabilities may be eligible for several forms of public assistance, both to meet the basic costs of living and to pay for health care. Examples of such programs are Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid.

Finally, a good way to determine how to pay for services is to call a provider in this directory that looks appropriate and ask them for help in finding ways to get services in your community.

For additional information regarding any of Alaska's medical assistance programs, call the Recipient Information Helpline in Anchorage: (907) 339-1932, or Toll Free: 1-800-780-9972, or go to the DHC website: www.hss.state.ak.us/dhcs/PDF/2003-MA-Handbook.pdf.

Section 5. Tackling Stigma

Unfortunately, discrimination and misconceptions are the most significant barriers to seeking help for behavioral health problems. It is often this “stigma” or mark of shame that keeps people from getting help.

Knowing some of the impacts that can occur if an individual is not able to overcome the stigma or shame are important. Being aware is the first step towards making changes.

1. Stigma discourages people from getting help. Early and appropriate services can be the best way to prevent an illness from getting worse. Many people don't seek help because they don't want to be labeled, such as a “drunk”, “mentally ill”, or “crazy.”
2. Stigma keeps people from getting good jobs and advancing in the workplace. Some employers are reluctant to hire people who have addictions or mental illnesses. Thanks to the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), such discrimination is illegal. But it still happens!
3. Stigma leads to fear and mistrust. Even though the vast majority of people who have addictions or mental illnesses are no more violent than anyone else, frequently characters with mental illnesses or addictions in prime time television drama are portrayed as violent or unreliable. Such inaccurate portrayals lead the general public to be distrustful or afraid of those who are experiencing a mental illness or substance use disorder.
4. Stigma results in prejudice and discrimination. Many individuals try to prevent people who have serious behavioral health problems from living in their neighborhoods.
5. Stigma results in inadequate insurance coverage. Many insurance plans do not cover behavioral health services to the same degree as other illnesses. When behavioral health is covered, coverage may be limited, inappropriate or inadequate.

What can you do about stigma?

1. Accept that behavioral health disorders are real illnesses. They are as real as diabetes, cancer, or Alzheimer's disease. Most behavioral health problems have well known causes and a variety of treatment options. Recovery is a realistic goal and common outcome.
2. Learn about mental illness and substance use disorders. Learn about the symptoms and treatments. Find out where to get help in case you or someone you know needs help.
3. Stop associating blame with the illness or addiction. Recognize that while people can take care of their physical and mental health, we cannot completely control our destiny. Like physical illness, addictions and/or mental illness can happen in spite of our best efforts.
4. Be careful how you talk. Stigma starts with labeling. How often do people use terms such as “weak,” “nuts,” “immoral,” or “a few bricks shy of a load?” Don't let labels dictate how you treat people.
5. Treat people with dignity and respect. People with addictions and mental illnesses often include your friends, your neighbors, your co-workers, and your family.

Section 6. What Are My Legal Rights?

There are a number of Federal and State laws that ensure the legal rights of those with a mental illness or substance use disorder.

The Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA)

The Americans with Disabilities Act ensures that people with disabilities, such as severe mental illness or a chronic substance use disorder, have legal protection against discrimination in the workplace, housing, state and local government services, public programs, transportation, and telecommunications. This part of the law is enforced by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and State and local civil rights enforcement agencies.

What are my rights in housing?

As a person with a disability you have a right not be discriminated against due to your disability when seeking housing to rent, lease or purchase. Three federal laws provide this assurance: The ADA, The Fair Housing Act, and Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act.

Do I have a right to privacy?

Behavioral health providers are required by law to keep your meetings and what you discuss confidential. This means that what you say—as well as your diagnosis and treatment—cannot be disclosed to anyone, including family members, without your written consent.

What is ‘informed consent’?

Informed consent is given by a patient or client who agrees to undergo or participate in a medical or surgical procedure, treatment, or study after learning exactly what will be involved. Informed consent requires that a person know and fully understand the risks and benefits of a certain treatment or procedure.

Can I refuse treatment?

People generally have the right to consent to or refuse treatment. However, under certain conditions, such as when a person is considered a danger to self or others, he or she may be required to seek or receive treatment. If you have questions about the commitment process, contact the Alaska Mental Health Board, Advisory Board on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, Alaska Legal Services, or the Alaska Disability Law Center.

Additional Information

For a detailed discussion of your rights, contact the Disability Law Center of Alaska (www.dlcak.org). They provide a number of referral and informational services. Additional information regarding your rights is available from The United States Department of Health and Human Services Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (www.mentalhealth.org).

The ADA Partner's Project is a cooperative effort of the Disability & Business Technical Assistance Centers and Access Alaska. The purpose of the Partner's Project is to provide expert in-depth advice for implementing the Americans with Disabilities Act.
