BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

William Gilbert Beattie was born in Sparta, Illinois on April 27, 1874. His family moved to Kansas in 1885. After three years of crop failure they moved to Oregon City, Oregon. As a teenager he taught school. In 1901 he graduated from the University of Oregon.

He moved to Alaska to work as teacher and principal in Wrangell in 1902-1902 and moved back to Oregon to teach for the 1903-1904 school year. In 1905-1911 he was a teacher and Superintendent of the Sitka Training School (Sheldon Jackson) and Superintendent of Schools in SE Alaska from 1911-1916 and apparently in College Grove, Oregon after that, or at least at some point during his career. He was sent to Metlakatla, Alaska from 1917-1919 to oversee a government school. There he knew Father Duncan and Edward Marsden.

In 1920-1926 Beattie was employed as Professor of Education at the Western Oregon Normal School. He worked in the Extension Division at the University of Oregon from 1926-1947. In 1954 Beattie wrote Marsden of Alaska: A Modern Indian (New York, 1955). He died in April of 1966. Biographical notes were taken from the donor's notes. For details and more controversial notes,

While he was in Sitka he built many buildings on campus, including on one solid rock when the Board of Missions in New York wanted it built on in what was a swampy area. He was fired for subordination.

In 1911 he became superintendent of Indian schools in Juneau, Alaska. He spent about 3 weeks per month on a boat visiting schools in many Southeastern Alaska villages. From 1917-1919 he was sent to Metlakatla to oversee the government school.

While in Metlakatla he clashed with Father Duncan who closed the store, cannery & water supply in a dispute with the natives. William Gilbert cut the chain & lock on the water supply forcing it open. In 1927 he was investigated by Congress for ruining Utopia in Metlakatla. His work was accepted by Congress. In 1937 he was again investigated by Congress and accused of ruining a Utopia.

Biographical information came from the donor.
