ACQUISITION: The photographs, donated by Patricia Roppel in June of 2012 (accession number 2012-19), include 27 Nome gold-rush-era photographs by B. B (Beverly Bennett) Dobbs and others, which belonged to Patricia Roppel's Uncle Moses [Mattieu], who went to Nome when the rush was on. Many photographs in the collection, including photographs of Nome and early northern gold mining, were given to Pat Roppel by R. N. DeArmond. The older photographs of Sitka were collected by R. N. DeArmond and Pat Roppel. The contemporary photographs (bulk 1980s) taken in Juneau, Ketchikan, Sitka, and other communities were all taken by Pat Roppel. Folder 21 was a gift of the Campbell Family; acc. #2013-038.

ACCESS: The collection is unrestricted.

COPYRIGHT: Request for permission to publish or reproduce material from the collection should be discussed with the Librarian.

PROCESSING: The photographs were housed in Mylar. The photographs of northern mining, in Folders 3-7, were organized, first, by general Nome mining; then alphabetically by the name of the creek or ditch. The last group of photographs, Folders 14-19, was organized alphabetically by community.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

Patricia Roppel was born in Ellensburg, Washington, to dairy farmers. Pat remembers the Nome photographs on the wall of her Uncle Moses' cabin in Ellensburg, where they darkened over the years from the soot and smoke from his [coal] stove.

Pat attended Ellensburg High School and graduated from Oregon State College in 1960. In 1959, she married Frank Roppel of Ketchikan, Alaska, who worked in the timber industry from 1956 to 2002. Pat taught high school and middle school English and home economics until 1965; then she retired from teaching to raise two children and to work as an editor and a management consultant.

Pat began writing for magazines in about 1962, and she went on to author numerous books about mining, fishing, wilderness, and the history of Southeast Alaska. In her book, Alaska's Salmon Hatcheries, 1891-1959, Pat traces the growth and development of Alaska's salmon hatcheries in the face of prevailing anti-conservation attitudes. According to a review by the Alaska Historical Commission, the central theme focuses on "the roles played by the federal government and the salmon industry in using fisheries regulations and artificial propagation to counter the adverse effects of commercial fishing on fish stocks and prevent the depletion and destruction of the Alaska salmon fishery."

Other books by Patricia Roppel include the following: Striking it Rich!: Gold Mining in Southern Southeast Alaska; Fortunes from the Earth: A history of the Base and Industrial Minerals of Southeast Alaska; Salmon from Kodiak: A History of the Salmon Fishery of Kodiak Island, Alaska; and, Southeast Alaska: A Pictorial History

SCOPE AND CONTENTS NOTE

All of the photographs in Folders 1 and 2, except for a couple of Whitehorse, are from the Nome region, ca. 1905-1907. The photographs of northern mining in Folders 3-7, which came from R. N. DeArmond, are also largely of the Nome region. Most of the photographs, largely by B. B. Dobbs, F. H. Nowell, and A. B. Kinne show prospecting activities, flumes, dredges, ditches, claims, and camps. Folder 8 contains miscellaneous gold rush era photographs. Folder 9's photographs are primarily of Treadwell Gold Mine buildings and operations. Folders 10-12 are of Sitka, with the bulk of the photographs spanning the years from 1900 to 1940. Folder 13 includes reproductions of older photographs and some more recent photographs by Patricia Roppel. Beginning with Folder 14, the collection is ongoing. Photographs are organized by location and ordered alphabetically.
