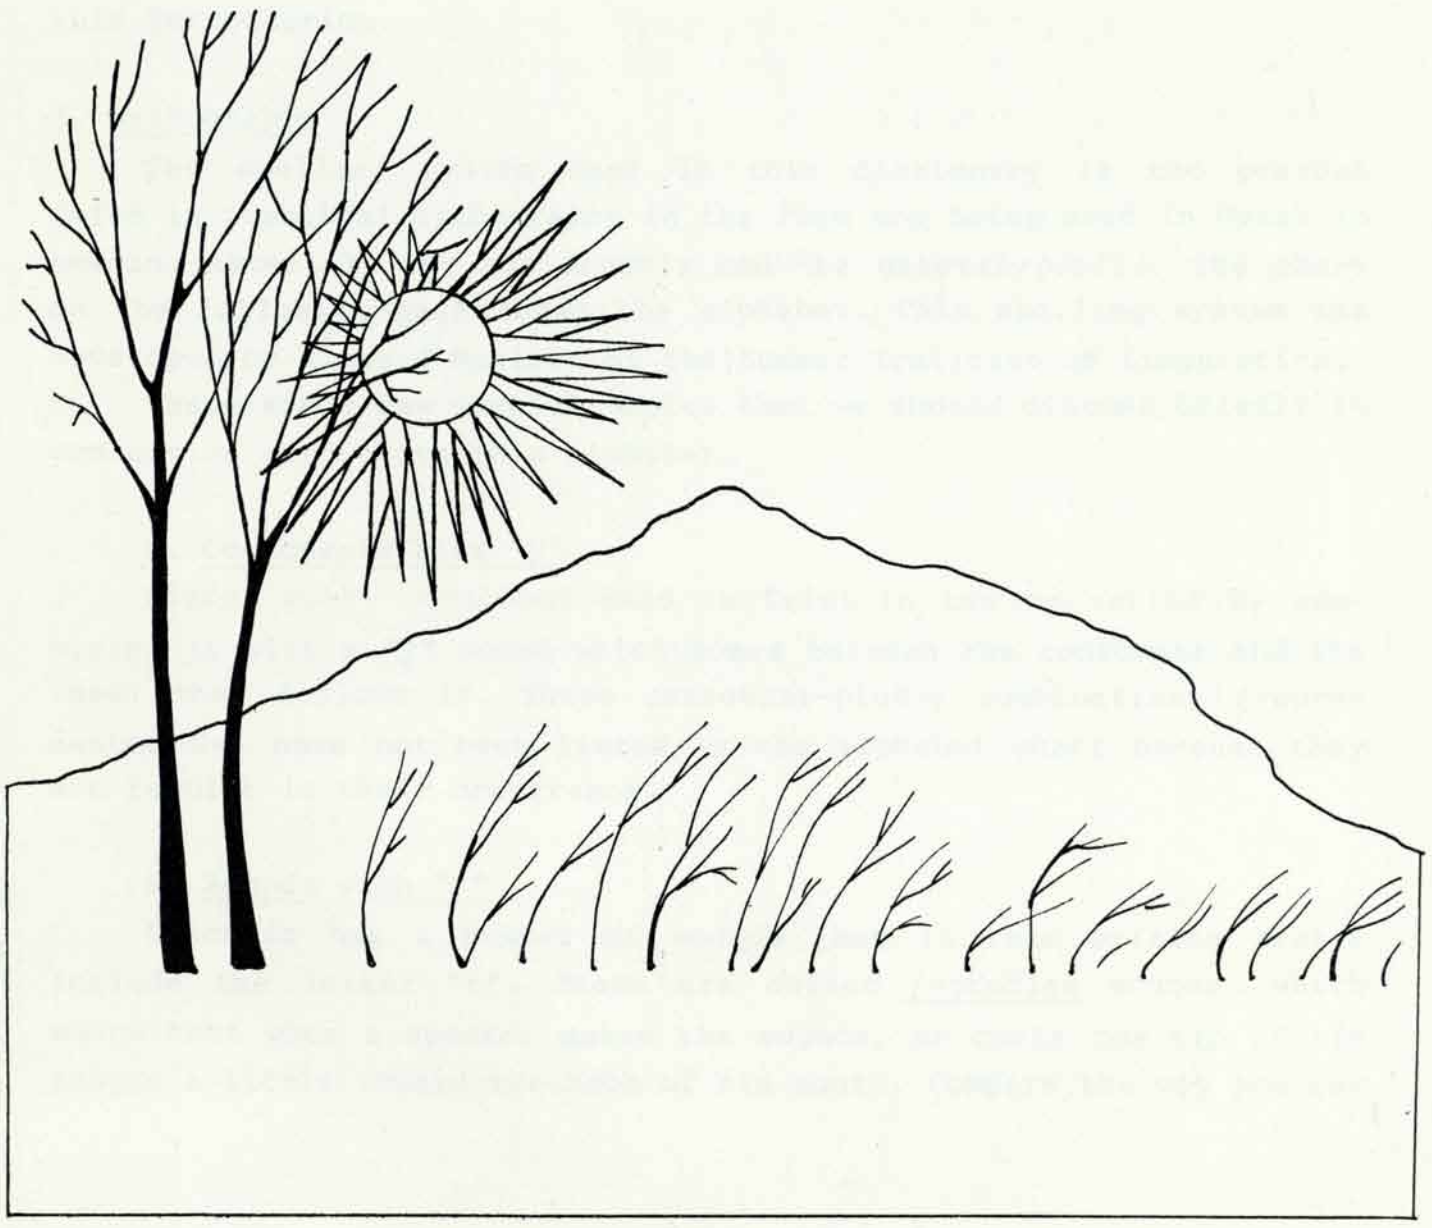
INTRODUCTION



INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

The Gwich'in language is spoken in the following villages in Alaska: Arctic Village, Birch Creek, Chalkyitsik, Circle, Fort Yukon and Venetie. This dictionary was written primarily for use in bilingual classrooms in those villages. It is by no means a complete lexicon of the Gwich'in language, but only a sampling of it. The purpose of the dictionary is to enable students to look up the Gwich'in equivalents of common conversational English words and phrases. Gwich'in speakers will be able to tell students other ways to say some of these things, but we have tried to list here the simplest and most usual words that people use to express their ideas in everyday speech. The choice of content and format is discussed further on in this Introduction.

1. Orthography

The spelling system used in this dictionary is the present Gwich'in practical orthography in the form now being used in Gwich'in reading materials for the schools and the general public. The chart on the following page shows the alphabet. This spelling system was developed by Richard Mueller of the Summer Institute of Linguistics.

There are a few special topics that we should discuss briefly in connection with using this alphabet.

A. Consonants Plus "y"

Almost every consonant used in Gwich'in can be varied by combining it with a "y" sound which comes between the consonant and the vowel that follows it. These consonant-plus-y combinations (represented Cy) have not been listed in the alphabet chart because they are regular in their occurrence.

B. Sounds with "r"

Gwich'in has a number of sounds that in this writing system include the letter "r". These are called retroflex sounds, which means that when a speaker makes the sounds, he curls the tip of his tongue a little toward the back of his mouth. Compare the way you say the English words "read" and "seed" to understand how this works. Gwich'in retroflex sounds are clear and simple to write: r, dr, tr, tr', rh, shr, and zhr. The sounds represented by r, rh, and zhr need to be discussed, however.

The plain "r" is used in the present writing system for two slightly different sounds. The first of these is the sound we hear in ch'ara'aa 'we're eating'. This particular "r" comes from the sound tr'. We continue to use the letter "r" to represent this sound where it occurs previous to a stem in a word. The single letter "r" is also used at the end of a word to represent a similar sound, as in yahvir 'he's boiling it'. This stem-final r has appeared in some ANLC publications written as zhr. Under the present standardized system, stem-final voiced r is always written simply as r.

The other r sound that occurs at the end of Gwich'in stems is voiceless r, which is written rh, as in dzirh 'mitten'.

In the present writing system, shr and zhr should never appear at the end of a word. However, these two retroflex fricatives occur at the beginning of stems in Gwich'in. The voiced one is zhr, and the voiceless one shr. Say the words shrii 'knife' and zhrii 'only' to hear the difference. Stem-initial zhr was written with a plain r in some ANLC publications, as you may notice if you use these books. Under the standard writing system, the r sound at the beginning of a stem is always written zhr or shr, not plain r.

C. Final "h"

The letter h is always written at the end of a word following a short vowel which is not followed by a consonant or a glottal stop. When a word ends in a long vowel, no h is written. To hear the difference, say the words shoh 'bear' (short o) and shoo 'happiness' (long oo).

D. Using the hyphen

The hyphen (-) is currently being used in written Gwich'in for the following purpose: to connect two or more words which in combination have a special meaning.

In some Gwich'in school materials being used today, noun phrases like łuk choo 'king salmon' and shoh zhrąįį 'black bear' are written łuk-choo and shoh-zhrąįį. This was done because it was thought that otherwise łuk choo might be interpreted as 'big fish', the literal meaning of the Gwich'in words. ('Black bear' is the same in both Gwich'in and English, of course.) There are some problems caused by this practice, though, and we felt that the difficulties outweighed any possible benefits of continued use of this practice.

E. Spelling Loan Words

Loan words are words which have come into a language rather recently from another language (for instance, from English into Gwich'in, or from Spanish into English), but which are used in sentences as if they were native words. In Gwich'in conversation today, some English words which do not have simple Gwich'in equivalents are used in the midst of Gwich'in sentences. The rule that has been adopted for Gwich'in school materials is to spell these words in the usual English way, rather than transcribing the sounds as a Gwich'in speaker says them. Thus, for example, although a person saying the word "milk" in a Gwich'in sentence might pronounce it "milik," following the sound rules of Gwich'in, we would still write it "milk." This helps children learning to spell both Gwich'in and English, whereas spelling the loan words phonetically might very likely confuse them about English spelling. There are a few exceptions to this rule when loan words have been in the Gwich'in language for a long time and have been much changed from their original English pronunciation, for instance saloojik 'pancake' (from an old dialect Americanism "slapjack"), or tuuvit "twenty-five cents" (from the English colloquialism "two bits").

There is another group of loan words which came into the Gwich'in language at an earlier time, during the last half of the nineteenth century. Most of these come from the French language as it was spoken in Canada at that time. These words have become such a well known and common part of the Gwich'in language that we spell them as if they were native words. Indeed, most people today think of them as native words. Here are some examples: lidii 'tea' (from 'le thé'); mahsį' 'thank you' (from 'merci'); lavasdaa 'feast' (from 'la fete'); fąą 'fancy' (from 'fin'). Notice that there are two letters in these words which only rarely occur in native Gwich'in words: m and f.

F. Nasalization of Vowels

All vowel sounds in Gwich'in may be pronounced in two ways: plain, where the air used in producing the sound is directed through the mouth, and nasalized, where the air is directed through the nose. Nasalization is indicated in the Gwich'in spelling system by a mark called the nasal hook (˛). To hear the difference between a plain and a nasalized vowel, say vatoo 'his cane' and tǫǫ 'night'.

There is a close relationship between nasalization of vowels and n following vowels. This is apparent in several of the more common patterns of dialect variation shown in entries in the dictionary. For example, in one dialect a speaker may say ninghyuk 'a long time', and in another dialect someone may say the same word nį̨ighyuk. Another area of variation is seen when n is dropped between two vowels in a series of prefixes. The n leaves its effect as nasalization of the resulting vowel sound, as in these pairs:

git'eenaachį̨į̨ or gat'ą̨ą̨chį̨į̨ she's leaning against it

ch'ineedzit or ch'ę̨ę̨dzit
bumblebee

Finally, when a verb stem begins with nd or nj and is preceded by a vowel plus h, the n sound from the verb stem is sometimes dropped and appears as nasalization of the preceding vowel. We see this in both the words meaning 'it shines':

ch'ahndit or ch'ą̨hdit
ch'ahndok or ch'ą̨hdok

A few common words which are nasalized by older Gwich'in speakers are beginning to be said by younger speakers with a plain vowel and final n, perhaps because of the influence of English sounds. Younger speakers may say łaiin instead of łą̨įį̨ for 'dog', or toon instead of tǫǫ for 'night'.

G. Tone

Tone, the relative pitch of the voice, affects the meaning of Gwich'in words. Say, or listen to a Gwich'in speaker say, the following pairs of words: ch'izhìn 'eagle', ch'izhín (something's body); shìh 'food', shíh 'brown bear'. Without the accent marks which we have added, the written words look exactly the same, but they are said differently and mean very different things. Tone has not been marked in Gwich'in reading materials, nor in this dictionary. In most cases, a Gwich'in speaker will automatically use the right tone as he reads a passage.

To assist the non-speaker of Gwich'in and the speaker who wants to learn more about tone, ANLC has prepared a copy of this dictionary with the tones marked. Interested people can obtain a copy of this version from ANLC.

2. Dialects

People who speak Gwich'in know that Gwich'in people from other parts of Gwich'in country speak a little differently from them. Gwich'in speakers in Old Crow in Canada have an even more different way of speaking. Yet people from all over this area can understand each other's slightly different ways of speaking. Such different but mutually understandable speech groups are called dialects.

Some entries in this dictionary have two similar forms of a Gwich'in word separated by the word or. This indicates that the two words are two ways of saying the same thing in two different dialects. In these cases, the first entry is usually the way the word is said by the compiler of this dictionary, Katherine Peter, who has spent most of her time in Fort Yukon. The second entry may be another way that Mrs. Peter has heard people say the word, or it may have been added by Richard Mueller, consultant on the dictionary, as a way that he has heard people say the word. The first entries, as a rule, represent the way the word is said by adults in Fort Yukon and other villages where the Fort Yukon dialect, or one very similar, is spoken. The second entries usually represent the way the word is said by some speakers in Arctic village and some older people in the other villages. Sometimes the second entry shows how the word is said by children and young people. In a few cases, the second entry is an old way of saying the word that only quite old people might use today. An example follows:

gwinzii gwahtsii or gwiiziit gwahtsii
'he is adept'
The first form is used in Fort Yukon, and the second form is used by some people in Arctic village and some old people in the other villages.

There are many variations from village to village in the way people make a particular sound or pronounce a particular word. The teacher should be able to adapt to the way words in his or her own dialect are spelled in this dectionary.

3. Content and Format

As noted above, this dictionary contains only a sampling of the entire rich range of the Gwich'in language, but we have made an effort to include as many simple and useful forms as possible. The subsections below, divided into discussions of nouns, verbs, and other kinds of words, describe the types of entries in the dictionary and explain how the cited forms were chosen.

A. Stems

Before discussing various kinds of words, we should introduce the term stem. In native Gwich'in words, the stem is almost always the final syllable of the word (although there are rare cases of stems having two syllables). People who are learning Gwich'in should be able to identify stems in order to understand how different Gwich'in words are derived.

B. Nouns

Nouns are the words that name things: objects, persons, or ideas. Some nouns are single words, like łuk 'fish'. Others are "noun phrases" made up of a noun and one or more modifying words, like łuk choo 'king salmon' (or 'big fish'). These words can be the subject (doer of action) or the object (receiver of action) in sentences.

Some Gwich'in nouns are cited in the dictionary in the following format:

fish: łuk

dog: łaii

These words are noun stems and can be used in the form given as independent words in sentences. In this dictionary, only words which can be used without modification in a sentence are given on the same line, immediately following the English word and a colon (:).

Some Gwich'in nouns cannot be used in sentences in their basic stem form, but need prefixes added before the stem to make complete, usable forms. Most of these nouns are always possessed. This means that the noun stem must be preceded by one of the possessive prefixes with meanings such as 'my', 'your', 'his', 'her', 'its', 'their', etc. Here is an example of a noun that is always possessed.

stem: -gin 'arm'

usable forms:	shigin	'my arm'
	nigin	'your arm'
	vigin	'his arm'
	diigin	'our arms'
	nakhwagin	'you guys' arms'
	googin	'their arms'
	ch'igin	'its arm'
	digin	'his own arm'

The form of the word meaning 'arm' which is given in the dictionary is vigin 'his arm' (the third person singular form). This practice is followed throughout the dictionary. Teachers can give students drills on the formation of possessed nouns with various prefixes. As a general rule, the following classes of nouns in Gwich'in must have possessive prefixes: (1) parts of the body, (2) relatives, family, and friends, and (3) personal qualities and conditions (such as 'spirit').

These same possessive prefixes are also used with nouns that can be used in their basic stem forms. Often, however, the noun stem undergoes a change in sound when it is used in its possessed form. For example:

Plain Stem Form	Possessed Form
toh 'cane'	vatoo 'his cane'

tsuh 'feather' vitsuu 'its feather' łąįį 'dog' vilik 'his dog'

Most of these changes follow simple rules, but some, like the non-possessed and possessed forms of 'dog', must be learned by memory.

Finally, some of the English nouns listed in this dictionary have no conversational Gwich'in equivalents. In everyday speech, most modern-day Gwich'in speakers would use the English words for these objects or ideas. To make this dictionary useful for explaining unfamiliar English words, however, descriptive definitions in Gwich'in have been given for some of these words. Examples are:

freight: k'eiich'ii kwaii vaa neerahaazhik ("things we travel around with") guarantee: k'eiich'ii iizųų ji' gwit'įį neegwahahtsyaa ("if a thing is bad, it will be returned")

The reader should be aware that these phrases would only be used in Gwich'in conversation if the speaker wanted to explain the idea to someone who did not know the commonly used English word. Trying to translate English sentences including these words by using the descriptive phrases will result in awkward and unnatural Gwich'in sentences.

A few nouns which are derived from verb forms are given at the end of the verb entry for that word. Therefore, the reader should look through the verb entries for words which are used in English as both nouns and verbs. For an example, look at the entry under 'whip' in the dictionary.

C. Verbs

Verbs are the words which express the action, event, or state of being that the sentence is telling about. The verb is the real center of the Gwich'in sentence. You will see that many Gwich'in verbs express the same idea that an entire English sentence composed of a noun, a verb, and other words is needed to translate.

The Gwich'in verbs given in this dictionary are only a sampling of the most basic verb forms that Gwich'in speakers and writers use. The examples in this dictionary were chosen as forms from which a Gwich'in speaker, writer, or student could build more complex forms. For the sake of simplicity and consistency, whenever possible all verbs in the dictionary are given in the third person singular ('he', 'she', 'it') form.

The format for verb entries is as follows:

English key word (usually a verb, sometimes just the most important word in the English verb phrase)

Gwich'in verb (usually in the third person singular)

English translation of the Gwich'in verb given

Example:

acquainted

yaandaii

he is acquainted with her

In this example, the English word 'acquainted' is the important idea, so the entry is alphabetized under that word. In the Gwich'in verb, the form cited translates as 'he (or she) is acquainted with her (or him)', and the verb stem -ndaii expresses the idea of being acquainted, or knowing.

Gwich'in verb stems are almost never used without one or more prefixes. This is why we have given usable forms, with prefixes, rather than the verb stems themselves. The reader may usually identify the verb stems, however, from the forms given. The Gwich'in verb stem always begins with a consonant (including Cy, Cw, or NC), and is followed by a long or short vowel, and may or may not have a consonant at the end. It is usually easy to find the stem of a Gwich'in verb because the last syllable of the verb is the stem. In one case there is a difficulty. If the last syllable of the verb begins with d or j immediately preceded by n, that n may or may not be part of the stem. Therefore, it is not always possible to tell from the form given in the dictionary whether the n belongs to the stem.

Another process that affects the apparent form of the verb stem is called stem-initial devoicing. This is a regular process wherein a voiced fricative at the beginning of a stem changes to its voiceless counterpart when it is preceded by ł or h immediately before the stem. (See the alphabet chart to identify the voiced fricatives and their voiceless counterparts.) Following are some examples from this dictionary:

stem: -zhol	yizhazhol	'she's blowing it up'
	yahshol	'she's blowing on it'
stem: -ghwaii	naaghwaii	'it's thawing'
	neeyahkhwaii	'she's thawing it'

Verb Forms Cited

You will see that for some verbs in the dictionary, only one form is given, while for others as many as six or eight different but related forms are given. When only one form is given, we have tried to give a form which is often encountered in speech and in elementary reading materials. For some verbs, this is the imperfective, which we have translated here with the English present progressive tense, 'he is ____ing', or where this would sound strange, with the English simple present, 'he ____s'. Sometimes, however, the most commonly occurring (or only occurring) form of the verb is the perfective, which we have usually translated in this dictionary with the English simple past, 'he ____ed', but sometimes by the English simple present. For many verbs, both the imperfective and the perfective are given. In some verbs, no distinction is made between present and past; some Gwich'in verbs lack perfective forms, others lack imperfectives. Most action verbs have both forms.

A verb form which frequently occurs in speech and reading materials but which has been omitted from this dictionary is the future, translated in English as "he will _____", or "he's going to _____". The format of this junior dictionary series did not allow for the inclusion of these forms, but the reader should be aware that the future stem is often quite different from the perfective and imperfective stem(s).

For some verbs, the same verb stem is given several times with different prefixes or accompanying words to show how it can be used different ways in conversation. Remember, again, this is only a sampling of the ways Gwich'in verb stems can be used, not a complete listing of the full verbs that can be derived from stems.

Many words that are adjectives (descriptive words, like 'red',

'big', 'pretty') in English are verb forms in their Gwich'in translations. In this dictionary such words are alphabetized according to the English adjective word, with the verbal Gwich'in translation given below in the standard verb format. For example:

red

daatsik

it is red

Some of these adjectival verbs (sometimes called neuter verbs) have shorter forms used to modify nouns, much as English adjectives do, except that in Gwich'in these words always follow the noun, whereas in English they usually come before it. When this is the case, a second listing with the word jidii 'something' is given, for example:

little

natsal

it is little

jidii tsal

something little

Sometimes two or more different Gwich'in verb stems appear under one English listing. This usually occurs when Gwich'in makes a distinction in meaning that English does not make. For example, in English we use the same word, 'swim', to describe a person swimming around and a fish swimming around, but in Gwich'in we must say dinjii neehiivik and łuk neehiilee. Because this kind of thing happens fairly often, be sure to read through all the entries under a given English listing to select the correct Gwich'in word for the idea you want to express.

Another reason for giving different Gwich'in verbs under one English listing is that the Gwich'in verbs may be synonyms (mean the same thing). This is usually the case when we have an entry of the following form:

yak'aa hiltłee, also yak'aa haazhii

he attached him

The two Gwich'in forms are equally acceptable ways of saying the same thing. They are so similar in meaning that we use the same English translation for both. (Notice that this is the way we use also; or means that the two forms are the ways of saying the same thing in different dialects.)

Sometimes you will see that a slight variation of the meaning of the verb (usually expressed by an adverb in English) is expressed in Gwich'in by a verb stem which is different, but related to, the basic stem. These slightly different forms are called aspectual variants. The Gwich'in language is rich in such forms, but only a sampling of them is given in the dictionary--the ones that you are most likely to encounter in ordinary speech or reading. We mention this only so that the reader will be aware of it and not be confused by the aspectual variants that do appear here. An example is seen in the following variants, both of which show a progressive (going along) and a perambulative (going around) stem in each pair:

ivyaa	'he's swimming (along)'
neehiivik	'he's swimming around'
aagal	'he's running (along)'
neehaagak	'he's running around'

Another place where Gwich'in makes a distinction that English does not is in a few verbs which have different stems for singular and plural subjects. For a good example, look at the entry under the English word go. Notice that one Gwich'in stem is used to express the idea of one person going, and another stem for more than one person going. (The dual, used to express two people going, is not used much in speech these days.) The existence of this distinction is another reason why it is important to look through all the entries to select the right word.

Finally, there is a group of Gwich'in verbs called classificatory verbs. These Gwich'in verbs express the idea of doing something to a certain kind of object. In English, we use the same verb 'wear' for wearing any kind of clothing, and the same verb 'throw' for throwing anything. In Gwich'in, however, various kinds of clothing require their own special verbs, with entirely different stems, meaning 'wear (a hat)', 'wear (shoes)', 'wear (a jacket)', etc. Different kinds of objects take their own special verbs meaning 'to throw', 'to handle', 'to roll', etc. For examples, see the entries under 'throw', 'roll', and 'wear'. We have indicated the class of objects for which each verb stem applies by describing either the class, or an object typical of the class. For instance, under 'throw', you will see a number of objects listed in parantheses () after the translations. (Projectile) means that this particular stem applies to any object "designed for throwing", like a spear; (a small thing, like a rock) means that this particular stem applies to any small heavy object; (a living thing) means a person or animal; (a stick) means any long wooden object; (several things) means that this stem applies to throwing more than one thing, for instance a handful of rocks. Note especially that verbs in this category almost always distinguish between a single object and a plural object. The entries in this dictionary are not complete for the entire Gwich'in classificatory verb system, but they do show some of the most commonly used forms.

D. Other Words

Besides the various kinds of nouns and verbs discussed above, the dictionary includes other kinds of words: postpositions, adverbs, interrogatives, interjections, pronouns, place names, and various modifying words. The format and content for these types of words are discussed briefly below.

Postpositions serve much the same function as English prepositions. They appear after nouns, noun or verb phrases, or possessive prefixes. They may be written as independent words in some cases, or they may appear "attached" to a prefix in other cases. They usually express direction, location, or relative position. For a good example of postpositions, see the entry under 'to', where we see three different postpositions, -ts'a', -naa, and -ntł'ee, in their usable forms, with different kinds of prefixes. We have tried to give the most commonly used typical forms with postpositions. The possessive prefixes for postpositions are similar to those for possessed nouns (see under Nouns for an example).

Many English prepositions are used in a variety of phrases in conversation. We have given examples of some of these under the appropriate listing. For an example of the kinds of listing that can occur with an English preposition, see the entry under 'across' in the dictionary.

Adverbs modify the idea expressed by the verb of a sentence. Many ideas expressed in English by independent adverbs are expressed in Gwich'in by verb prefixes, which are not listed separately in this dictionary. The adverbs that are listed are given simply following their Englihs equivalents, for example:

now: juk

Pronouns are words that "stand in" for the names of people or objects-- 'it', 'we', 'they', and so on. The function of pronouns in an English sentence like 'he told him' can often be performed in a Gwich'in sentence by parts of the verb: yahnyaa, where 'he' is "understood" and 'him' is represented by the first y. Where independent Gwich'in words equivalent to English pronouns exist, they are given as simple equivalents to their English form.

A few place names for important places in the Gwich'in region are included, alphabetized under their "official" English name. Sometimes this just shows how a Gwich'in place name is correctly spelled in Gwich'in, rather than the approximate spelling on the maps; or it may show the native name for a place that English speakers have renamed. There are, of course, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of place names in Gwich'in, which we hope will eventually be recorded for history.

Interrogatives is a general term for words used in asking questions that require more of an answer than "yes" or "no." These are listed under their English equivalents, such as 'who', 'what', 'how', and so on, but examples of actual questions are not given in this dictionary.

A few other kinds of words are included in the dictionary. These are words which have special functions in sentences. Words like łii 'apparently' modify the 'flavor' of the entire sentence. Other words like dąį' 'when' link words or clauses to the rest of the sentence. The use of these words is properly the subject of a grammar, rather than a dictionary, but they are included here to assist in translation and language learning.

E. Other Points of Format

Many entries include two different Gwich'in words separated by the English words or or also. Or means that the two Gwich'in words are different ways of saying what is basically the same word, modified by dialect differences or individual preference. Probably these two forms would not be used interchangeably by the same speaker. Also means that the two words are both Gwich'in equivalents of the English listing. Either one might be used by a speaker, depending on personal preference or slight shades of meaning. Sometimes the words listed with also are a modern-day way of saying something and an older way of saying the same thing.

The reader will notice that in the verb entries, some are translated 'he _____' and some 'she _____'. Gwich'in does not make a distinction between masculine and feminine pronouns as English does. The alternative translations have been used to show children this fact in applied form, and also to accustom them to using English pronouns correctly. It is also good for children, who may picture to themselves the actions described in the examples, to imagine both men and women, boys and girls, as the actors in the sentences. The teacher should probably explain, expecially to young children, that the Gwich'in verb translated 'he does it' can also mean 'she does it', and the verb translated 'she's walking' can also mean 'he's walking'--in Gwich'in, but not in English.

F. A Note on the English Glosses

In general, we have tried to use everyday conversational English words for the listings and translations in the dictionary. However, because some of the initial compilation was done from literary sources, there are some glosses which are not used in modern everyday English. In most cases these are cross-referenced with a more usual English word. There are also some specialized English words, with their specialized Gwich'in equivalents, which have been used in translating English-language religious literature into Gwich'in. We have included these because religious translations have been important in the history of Gwich'in literature and continue to be produced. The Gwich'in words that translate these specialized words usually also have a more general, non-religious meaning, which we have tried to find out and include in the dictionary. However, the reader should be aware that there may be other, perhaps more correct, English translations for the Gwich'in words in this dictionary. It is impossible in such a condensed format to give the kind of full, discursive definitions that some of the Gwich'in words require.

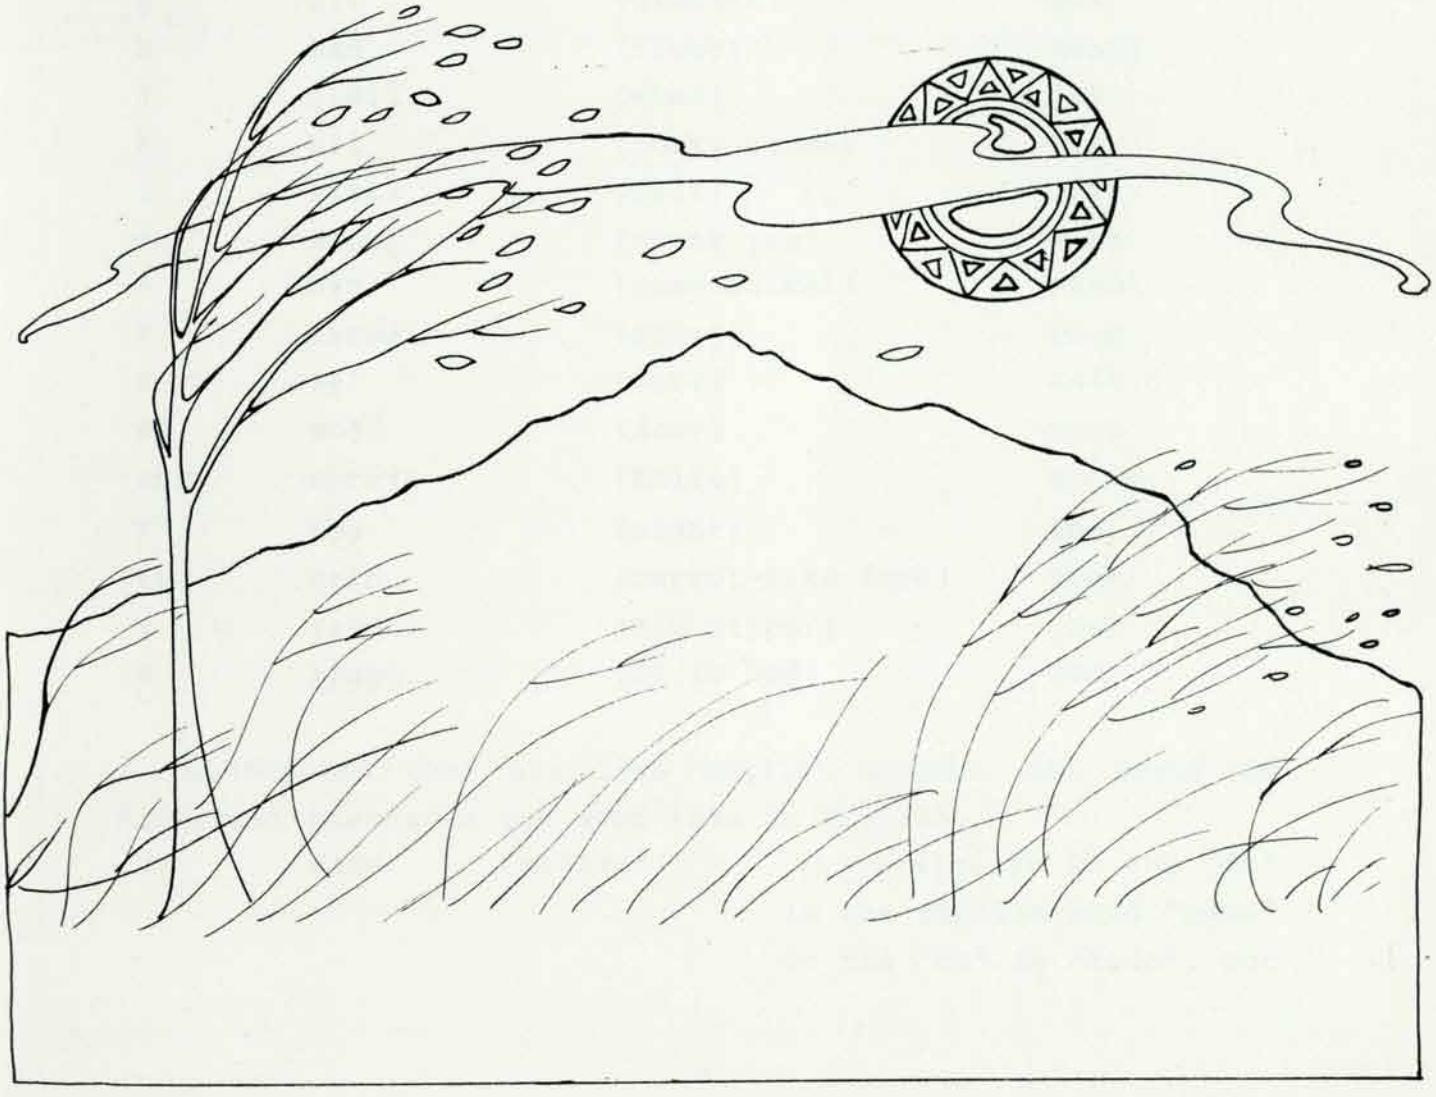
Sometimes, to avoid repetition, we have written see after the English listing, with a reference to the other English word under which the full Gwich'in information appears.

4. How This Dictionary Was Written

Katherine Peter, a speaker and writer of Gwich'in who has lived in both of the major Alaska Gwich'in dialect areas, compiled the dictionary files, using both her own knowledge and an older dictionary published in 1911 by Archbishop Robert McDonald. Most of the old, non-current forms come from McDonald's dictionary. Acting as consultants and suggesting additions to the dictionary files were Jeff Leer, staff linguist at the Alaska Native Language Center, and Richard Mueller of the Summer Institute of Linguistics. The final decision on the inclusion of a form has been Mrs. Peter's. Jane McGary of ANLC wrote the Introduction and typed out the entries in preparation for final typing at the National Bilingual Materials Development Center where it was illustrated and made photoready. Richard Mueller wrote the Guide to Reading Gwich'in.

GUIDE TO READING GWICH'IN



GUIDE TO READING GWICH'IN

The Gwich'in alphabet is adapted to English as closely as possible. Each letter in Gwich'in is meant to represent one sound and always the same sound. It does not change like some of the letters do in the English alphabet.

The CONSONANTS

1. Consonants that are pronounced almost the same as in English. The same letters are used in both languages:

Sound	Gwich'in Example	(English Meaning)	English Equivalent
ch	chụụ	(water)	chew
d	dah	(blood)	daughter
dr	drin	(day)	drink
g	git	(glacier)	get
h	han	(river)	honey
j	jidii	(what)	jet
k	kii	(rock, stone)	key
l	lisil	(salt)	lift
m	mahsį'	(thank you)	mama
n	nin	(game animal)	night
r	laraa	(money)	rock
s	są'	(star)	salt
sh	shat	(scar)	shut

2. Consonants that are like English sounds, but occur in different places in the word than in English.

dz	dzan	(muskrat)	It is similar to the "dz" in the English word "adze" or the "ds" in "fads", but it can occur at the beginning of words, which it does not do in English.

ts	tsuk	(marten)	It is similar to the "ts" in the English word "cats", but it also can occur at the beginning of words unlike English.
w	kwaa	(negative)	It is the same as the "w" in the English "wolf", but it occurs only following other consonants.

3. Consonants that are either like English sounds, but are spelled differently; or are different from English sounds, but are spelled with English letters.

dh	Nindhaa?	(Are you hot?)	It is the same as the "th" in the English words "the" and "that".
v	veenjit	(for him)	It is similar to the "v" in the English word "visit", but it is actually a "b" made without completely closing the lips.
zh	zheh	(house)	It is the same as the "z" in the English word "azure".

4. Consonants that are different from any English sounds. These are most easily described in terms of certain phonetic features that they have in common.

Friction The friction is indicated by the letter "h" after the letter concerned

ddh	ddhah	(mountain)
gh	ch'aghoo	(egg)
kh	khah	(pus)

tth	tthał	(fence)
zhr	azhrąįį	(it's black)

"l" sound The tongue is in the same place as for the English "l" sound.

ł	łuk	(fish) Place your tongue in the same place as if to make a "l" sound, but instead of voicing the "l", just blow air out the sides of your mouth.
tł	vitłee	(his knee-cap cartilage) It is similar to the "cl" in the English word "clock".
dl	dlak	(red squirrel) It is similar to the "gl" in the English word "glad".

Catch-in-the-breath the catch-in-the-breath (glottalization) is indicated by the apostrophe (') either by itself or after the consonant concerned.

ch'	ch'izhin'	(golden eagle)
k'	k'ii	(birch bark)
t'	t'aa	(cotton-wood tree)
tł'	tł'oo	(grass)
tr'	tr'il	(fishwheel)
ts'	ts'ee	(ground hog)
tth'	tth'an	(bone)

The VOWELS

English has a great variety of spellings for vowels, using various combinations for the same sound; one sound, for example, occurs with different spellings in mood, group, fruit, blue, shoe, crew, do, and two. Only ONE spelling will be used for each Gwich'in vowel. Vowels may be either long or short in duration, the long vowel being indicated by a doubling of the letter.

Vowel	Gwich'in Example	(English Meaning)	English Equivalent
a	vats'ah	(his elbow)	father (before "'" or "h")
			sofa (before other consonants)
aa (long)	njaa	(white-winged scoter)	father
e	zheh	(house)	eight (before "'" or "h")
			eddy (before other consonants)
ee (long)	zhee	(sky)	eight
i	git	(glacier)	seed (before "'" or "h")
			sit (before other consonants)
ii (long)	gwiijii	(rock slide)	seed
o	vagho'	(his teeth)	go
oo (long)	vaghoo	(its egg)	go
u	łuh	(dirt)	spoon
uu (long)	łuu	(ice)	spoon nasalization Any of the vowels may be said with a nasal quality. This nasalization is marked by the comma (,) under the vowel concerned.

vowel	Gwich'in Example	(English Meaning)
ą	chųų nitsyą'	(shallow water)
ąą	tsyąh	(northern flicker bird)
ęę	van vęę	(lake side)
įį	niliį	(meat)
ǫǫ	daatsǫǫ	(mouse)
ų	vyųh	(herring gull)
ųų	gyųų	(worm)
