Biographical Note

Edward E. Harvey became president of the Porcupine Gold Mining Company in 1907. The company continued the gold mining operations on Porcupine Creek, northwest of Haines, which Jack Dalton had abandoned after flooding on the creek destroyed the flume. While Harvey was president, the company built a new 7,000 foot-long flume, at a cost of $200,000.00. In September, 1915, floods destroyed the lower half of the flume again, damaged the plant and shut down the operation. It was rebuilt in 1916 and mining continued until 1918 when another flood hit. At one time the Porcupine Gold Mining Company employed 80 men working in 2, ten-hour shifts. [Portions from: History of the Mines and Miners in the Juneau Gold Belt, by Earl Redman, 1988.]

Scope and Content Note

The collection depicts the Porcupine Mining Co. in Porcupine, Alaska, including images of the flume, and the Harvey family. Forty-four photographs marked with an "E" preceding the numbers may be Winter & Pond photographs. Two photographs were taken by Case & Draper.
