ACQUISITION: This collection is a gift of Leonard Delano’s son, Douglas Delano. The initial donation, prints of the raising of the Islander, Acc. # 2011-032. The balance of the collection, including nitrate film negatives, Acc. # 2016-040.

ACCESS: The collection is unrestricted.

COPYRIGHT: Request for permission to publish or reproduce material from the collection should be discussed with the Librarian.

PROCESSING: This collection was divided into series. Series I consists of b&w photographic prints, Series II consists of 8x10 nitrate negatives, and Series III consists of Kodak negative albums that contain 3x4 sheet film. A portion of the negatives in Series II and III have been scanned, however, no prints have been made. This collection has been described at the item level. All items were placed into Mylar photo sleeves or negative sleeves, pH-neutral folders, and an archival box.
BIOGRAPHICAL NOTE

LEONARD H. DELANO was born in Seattle, Washington, on August 30, 1908; except for four years in Alaska (including two years with the Islander raising), he lived in Oregon. While in Alaska he worked as a motion picture cameraman for the 1938 movie Call of the Yukon.

After returning to Oregon, he did newsreel work using a 35mm motion picture camera and worked as a reporter for the Oregonian and the Oregon Journal. Leonard attended Benson Tech High School in Portland and was a member of the University of Oregon class of 1930, majoring in geology and journalism. He began working for Brubaker Aerial Surveys while learning photogrammetry. He eventually bought the company as well as several other photographic businesses, all operating as Delano Photographics and Western Mapping Company in Portland.

He retired in 1983 after working 48 years in commercial photography and photogrammetry mapping. He accumulated a large collection of historical photographs and continued to be interested in the Geological Society of the Oregon Country. Often he was asked to speak on illustrated geology subjects for this and other groups. Leonard was a member of the American Society for Photogrammetry and Remote Sensing, the Photographers Association of America, the Society of Photo-Optical Instrumentation Engineers, and the Masonic Lodge.

The father of two boys, Leonard often shared with them stories of his adventure in Alaska. He died in 1989 without realizing his dream of publishing his account of the Islander's raising.

SCOPE AND CONTENTS NOTE

Prints and negatives document Delano’s work as a professional photographer in Juneau, 1932 – 1936. They include photos of aircraft and boats. Two particular portions of the collection document the raising of the ship the Islander, in 1934, and still images taken during Delano’s employment as a camera operator on the motion picture Call of the Yukon, in 1938.

SUBJECTS

Glaciers, wildlife, boats and ships, aircraft, Juneau, Alaska.
